The State of Texas, born some sixty years too late to assist in the revoluonary events of '76, has its own Independence day in addition to the national Fourth of July, which it shares,

Little Italy has two mysteries cleared up, and breathes more freely. One is why Angelino Pascalini worked so hard and spent so little, and the so hard and spent so little, and the other is why Angelino Pascalini always insisted on seeing the papers that are printed in English, which language everybody knew Angelino could be sought the sought the world of fashion by storm and important business of the day. San Jacinto as told in the books. But there is in the Southwest a fire side tale about it which deserves to be better known. It is that the night before the battle, the Mexican general, Santa Ana, sent a flag of truce to the Texan camp with a summous to surrender and an offer of pardon. Grim old Sam Houston, the "father" of Texas, heard the message and said to one of his aids:

"Tell him to go to hell! Put that into Spanish." And the aid, translating the answer into the language of Spanish military diplomacy, made oration as it appears in the books:

"General Houston prays that you will have the kindness to present his compliments to General Santa Ana,"

The biggest celebration of San Jacinto day was at San Antonio, for there is the Alamo, and there was the fight which came before San Jacinto and turned the blosd of every Texan engaged to fire and his nerves to cold steel.

The defenders of the Alamo, though bound by no law like those of Thermopylae, disdained to surrender. They knew too well, from the fate of Noian and his hunters a generation before Angelino knew old Binnick. "He got a hundred dollars?" he aske I. "A hundred dollars. Why, he's got a barrel of money-a barrel."

Angelino asked no more. Here was a fresh complication. What if his name were to appear in the paper before he had $100? The thought caused him anxiety. Nevertheless he knew the Government was omnipotent, and that if it ordered him to marry, marry he must, money or no money.

So Angelino worked on and worried not a little over the possibility of his name appearing in the list of those doomed to marry whether they had money or not. On Sunday he visited Nina, who noticed his abstraction and asked the reason. Angelino would
